It presents actual or best-guess historical event and introduces theoretical issues of cognitive science as they become relevant.

EDITORIAL NOTE: Until now we have included battlefield detail in order to contextualise and illustrate the research issues being raised. From here on in, however, we shall be less interested in the psychology of Humankind at war and more concerned with the political and economic systems which sent them to war in the first place; and, of these, the role of deliberate state deception - which is both psychological and political at the same time - will never be far from centre stage.
1917 [Friday 5th-6th January] War in the Balkans [XXXII - The Salonika Campaign (The Rome Conference)]: (Continued from 1916 (6th December)) Lloyd George and Chief of the Imperial General Staff Sir William Robertson [<=1916 (12th December)] meet their French counterparts Briand and Sarrait, in order to sort out the "Easterner-Westerner" issue once and for all. Briand wants more men in Salonika, but the British want the war effort concentrated on the Western Front. The issue is decided by Britain's inability to provide and protect the shipping which would be needed to support an expanded presence, and so the Salonika Front remains static, posing little threat to either Vienna or Istanbul. For more of the detailed discussions in Rome see pages 169-173 of Dutton (1975 [full text online]). [THREAD = THE SHAPING OF THE MODERN WORLD] [THREAD = WW1 MAJOR BATTLES AND CAMPAIGNS]

1917 [6th-19th January] The Middle Eastern Campaigns [XVIII - The Baghdad Offensive (Battle of the Khadairi Bend)]: (Continued from 1916 (13th December)) On 6th January 1917 General Maude's advance up the Tigris against the Mesopotamian capital, Baghdad, encounters well fortified Ottoman positions at the Khadairi Bend [map] which delay the advance by about a fortnight [sub-thread continues at 9th January 1917 ...]. [THREAD = THE SHAPING OF THE MODERN WORLD] [THREAD = WW1 MAJOR BATTLES AND CAMPAIGNS]

1917 [9th January] The Middle Eastern Campaigns [XIX - The Sinai Offensive (The Battle of Rafah)]: With the advance up the Tigris now well under way, General Murray's E.E.F. [=Egyptian Expeditionary Force] launches an attack on the Sinai Front at Rafah [map], threatening Gaza 20 miles further up the coast. The Ottoman central redoubt is captured that same day, leaving Egypt now fully conquered, and setting the stage for an advance northward through Palestine to threaten Jerusalem and - in due course - Damascus [sub-thread continues at 8th March 2017 ...]. [THREAD = THE SHAPING OF THE MODERN WORLD] [THREAD = WW1 MAJOR BATTLES AND CAMPAIGNS]

1917 [15th January] The Weaponisation of Diseases [Germany Against America]: On 15th January 1917 Norwegian police in the town of Karasjok [map] detain Baron Otto Karl von Rosen [Wikipedia biography], a Swedish national, on suspicion of being an agent for the Germans. In his luggage is found an ampoule of curare poison and ready-to-culture anthrax spores absorbed into sugar cubes. The anthrax is nowadays widely presumed to have been prepared in a German lab for use by Anton Dilger's [check him out] "biological sabotage" network in the United States, where it would have been used to infect livestock destined for Britain and France. The contraband will remain unnoticed in the vaults of the Trondheim police museum until discovered in the late 1990s - for details see Redmond, et al. (1998 [full text online]). 1917 [2nd February] Zionism During WW1 [VI - The Balfour Declaration (First Draft)]: (Continued from 9th May 1916) Following 15 years of sustained pressure [see 23rd October 1902 and follow the forward links], and sensing an imminent end to Ottoman rule in the Holy Land [see both 6th and 9th January above], the Zionist lobby in British politics ...
... makes a major step forward in its campaign to have Palestine reborn as a homeland for the Jewish diaspora. It takes the form of a suggested letter of intent drafted by [SIR] Rufus Isaacs [Lord Reading] for Arthur Balfour [ditto] and delivered to Walter Rothschild [ditto]. Nowadays better known as the "Balfour Declaration" [Wikipedia briefing and full text], the final revision will become one of the most contentious political documents ever signed. It will, for example, be described as bringing about "a peace to end all peace" (Fromkin, 1989 [Amazon]), and summarised a full century after the facts in Chapter 12 of Jim Macgregor and Gerry Docherty's (2017) "Prolonging the Agony" [check it out] as follows ...

"In pandering to a small group of Zionists, the Balfour Declaration was bizarre, deceitful, and a deliberate betrayal of the loyal Arabs fighting in the desert war against the Turks. Perfidious Albion had rarely plumbed such duplicitous depths" (p396).

1917 [4th February] [Read firstly the entries for 13th March 1878 (Jingoism in Britain), 25th April 1898 (Jingoism in America), and 28th February 1900 (Jingoism and the media.)] Siegfried Sassoon [see 1915 (29th May)] publishes an eight-line poem entitled "Blighters", a powerful attack on "Jingoism" [U.S. = "Yellow Journalism"] - the brazen caperings of popular patriotism. The full text is online [click here], and so we shall merely gloss it as follows: "The House" (Sassoon calls it a music hall but could just as easily be a circus, a cinema, a stags' gathering, or any like carousing) is thronged with happy jingoes, grinning to order while dancing "harlots" hammer out a warlike ditty entitled "We're sure the Kaiser loves our dear old Tanks!". The first-person commentator is aghast, and - as a front-line fighter of no little renown - wonders at how ignorant everyone is as to the true realities of war. He would like (and even Sassoon the rebel falls short of the precise allusion) to see how their sphincters would slacken were a tank to suddenly crash into their safe (and highly profitable) world. [THREAD = WW1 JINGOISM]

1917 [??th February] The Welsh poet Ellis Evans [Bardic name "Hedd Wyn"] [Wikipedia biography] enlists in the Royal Welch Fusiliers. Assigned to 15th Battalion he will be killed on Pilkem Ridge on 31st July. He will win the 1917 Bardic Chair posthumously six weeks later.

1917 [20th February] The News as State Deception [I - WW1 Propaganda (Britain's Department of Information)]: [Continued from 18th April 1897 (cinematic deception) and 8th February 1898 (newsprint deception) ESSENTIAL PRIOR KNOWLEDGE] Lloyd George establishes a Department of Information [Wikipedia briefing] with John Buchan [check him out] as its director. One of his first allocated tasks is to persuade Britain at large of the need to destroy the Ottoman Empire's hold over the Middle East (Fromkin, 1989) [sub-thread continues at 10th February 1918, but see also the How Our Papers Reported It insets starting at 16th April 1917 ...]. 1917 [9th March-6th April] WW1 in the Caucasus [XI - Revolution in the North (The Transcaucasian Committee)]: [Continued from 2nd August 1916] On 9th March 1917, in the aftermath of the February Revolution [see 4th March above], the Petrograd Soviet starts to implement its policy of defence-only military operations. It sets up a Special Transcaucasian Committee (OZAKOM) [Wikipedia briefing] to manage the Caucasus Front, where sickness and desertsions have become rife. On 6th April the United States declares war on the Central Powers, but on the explicit advice of Secretary of State Robert Lansing [see insets 16th April below], decides NOT to do likewise against the Ottoman Empire. Yudenich will be dismissed for insubordination shortly afterward, only to reappear in Petrograd at the time of the Kornilov Affair [see 10th September below] [sub-thread continues at 15th November 1917 ...]. The new administration is recognised by the United States on 20th March, followed two days later by Britain, France, and Italy (concerned as they are that Russia should stay in the war. against Germany [if Russia called a ceasefire on the Eastern Front, it would double the German strength on the Western Front - Ed.], even though it is well understood in diplomatic circles that this will extend only to defensive operations. However even limited war is not acceptable to the "Bolsheviks" [Wikipedia briefing] within the Petrograd Soviet, and so the basic tensions which brought about the February Revolution do not go away [sub-thread continues at 8th April ...], [THREAD = THE SHAPING OF THE MODERN WORLD][THREAD = WW1

1917 [26th March-19th April] The Middle Eastern Campaigns [XXI - The Palestine Offensive (Stalemate at Gaza)]: [Continued from 8th March] Having broken through the Ottoman defences at the Battle of Rafah, Murray's E.E.F. - now including 53rd (Welsh) Division [Wikipedia briefing] - moves against the well-defended coastal city of Gaza. Fighting begins 26th March, but a month of heavy casualties forces the magnate Herbert Hoover [check him out] writes his friend and presidential adviser "Colonel" Edward House [ditto] to suggest that his experiences with managing food relief shipments into occupied

Belgium [see 10th October 1914] would prove useful to the Wilson Administration in managing food

1917 [6th April] America Enters WW1: On 6th April 1917 the United States formally declares war on the Central Powers and begins mobilising her armed forces. The declaration forces American citizens in now-hostile territory to flee on last-trains-out to neutral havens like Switzerland. One of the diplomats fleeing from Vienna to Bern is future Director of the CIA Allen Dulles [check him out]. One of those trying to get into Germany is Tsarist exile and future Bolshevik leader Lenin [this narrative is picked up 8th April 1917 in the <Russian Revolution> sub-thread ...]. [THREAD = THE SHAPING OF THE MODERN WORLD]

 THE WARREN COMMISSION COVER UP BEGINS HERE *****

1917 [8th April (O.S. 25th March)] The 1917 Russian Revolution [V - Provisional Government (A Missed Opportunity)]: [Continued from 16th March 1917 (but see also 6th April above)] On Easter Sunday 8th April 1917, in the refugee chaos following America's entry into WW1, future Bolshevik leader Lenin [see 6th April 1917] phones the U.S. Embassy in Bern, Switzerland, and speaks briefly to the duty officer, who refuses to make the time available out of hours (the fact was, he would later explain, that he had a hot date). Only years later would it emerge that Lenin then turned for help to the German Embassy instead, who rapidly approved his transit to Petrograd. In hindsight, it was an historically expensive missed opportunity for the Allies, because once back in Petrograd [see 16th April below] Lenin revitalised the Bolsheviks, and spent the summer of 1917 fomenting what would become the "October Revolution" [Wikipedia briefing], and - as Germany had hoped that it would - taking Russia out of the war against them. That duty officer was none other than Allen Dulles [check him out], future Director of the CIA 1953-1961, enemy of John Fitzgerald Kennedy, and approver of truth as a member of the Warren Commission 1964-1966. His brief encounter with Lenin was a story Dulles "never tired of repeating" (Helms, 2003, p59), and he never again failed to make time to cultivate a possible intelligence contact [sub-thread continues at 16th April 1917 ...], [THREAD = THE SHAPING OF THE MODERN 1917 [9th April-16th May] The Battle of Arras: Carefully timed to coincide with the Nivelle Offensive [see offensive by the British 1st (largely Canadian), 3rd (largely Scottish), and 5th Armies on a front running from Vimy Ridge in the north to Neuville-Vitasse in the south, a distance of 11 miles in all. There are then a sequence of lesser battles, as follows ...

1917 [14th April] The Flip Sides of Patriotism [II - The Legal Framework (The Espionage Act of 1917)]: [Continued from 7th December 1915] On 14th April 1917 Congress begins a long and deeply reflective debate concerning how best to deal with espionage and sabotage arising from the United States' recent status as a combatant nation. The resulting Espionage Act of 1917 [Wikipedia biography] eventually becomes law 15th June 1917, and includes provisions against causing or attempting to cause military insubordination and obstructing the recruiting process [sub-thread continues at 27th April 1917 ...]. "It is not entirely clear whether the Root Mission accomplished anything" Libbey, 1977

1917 [16th April (O.S. 3rd April)] The 1917 Russian Revolution [VI - Provisional Government (Lenin Arrives Petrograd)]: [Continued from 8th April 1917] On 16th April 1917 Lenin arrives back in Petrograd. As the Germans had hoped when they had issued him his transit visa, he starts making inflammatory speeches straight away, and over the coming weeks brings a new sense of urgency and focus not just to the Bolsheviks in the Petrograd Soviet but also to the workers’ and soldiers’ committees in the country at large, who will henceforth be encouraged to refer to themselves as "Red Guards" [= КРАСНАЯ ГВАРДИЯ, pronounce as Kraz-naya Gvardia] [Wikipedia briefing].

CAMEO - REDS vs WHITES: The red flag had been a symbol of barricade dissidence and mutinous intent since the late 18th Century, and a uniquely left-wing statement of class-consciousness from the mid-19th Century [see Wikipedia briefing for specific instances] ...

READING: Check out the hits for the word "flag" in the 1832 chapters of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" [Project Gutenberg full text online], and note especially what happens to the "red flag" on the barricade in Chapter IV-5 (a flag which will still being celebrated musically into the 21st Century - check it out).

When the red flag became the official symbol of anti-Tsarist revolution in 1917, the counter-revolutionary Tsarist factions more or less instantly became known as "Whites". The revolution was thus class-aligned and colour-coded from the very beginning. In his (2018) book "The Russian Revolution" [Amazon], Robert H. Wilde explains that Lenin's expectation was no longer that Russian middle-class intellectuals - the famed "Bourgeoisie" of Marxist theory - could be persuaded to change anything, leading him to appeal instead to workers, peasants, the armed forces, students, etc. - the equally famed "Proletariat" ...

ASIDE: This is why the compound appellation "Marxist-Leninist" had to be invented. "Communism" does not appear in any significant propagandistic sense until 1925 [Wikipedia briefing], when the word "commune" was borrowed from the French revolutionary vocabulary [see 15th July 1789 and see 18th March 1871]. It is also why Lee Harvey Oswald so carefully phrased his TV persona as "A Marxist, but not a Communist" - YouTube him here. The O.E.D. dates the first appearance of the word "Commie" to 1928, but it remained rare until its propaganda value was recognised and exploited by the Western media in the late 1940s.

CAMEO - REDS, WHITES, AND BANKERS: The Germans were far from being the only foreign interest groups with bets riding in the Petrograd Stakes, for the February Revolution can neither be politically nor militarily explained without due reference to those bankrolling the various sides. Which takes us, despite the fact that the United States had only just entered the war, to NYC's Wall Street and to the counting houses of London, Paris, and Frankfurt. The point is that sovereign lenders had taken sides well before the war, and many - especially from the Jewish banking houses - were noticeably anti-Romanov thanks to the Tsarist liking for anti-Jewish pogroms. For example, NYC's Kuhn, Loeb and Company, headed by "the Jewish Avenger" Jacob Schiff, reportedly blocked every attempt by the Tsar to raise a loan in the United States between 1904 and 1916. These issues are explored in detail in Richard B. Steele's (2017) "Wall Street and the Russian Revolution". With very few exceptions, the Western allies supported the Whites against the Reds from the outset (Madeira, 2008).

FURTHER READING: For a gloriously detailed account of the background to, and exploits of, the Root Commission see Szajkowski (1969) (full text online (JSTOR registration required)) and Richard B. Spence's (2017) "Wall Street and the Russian Revolution, 1905-1925" (Amazon) - here is the broad thrust of his findings...

"The Root venture has been aptly described as '[a] clandestine intelligence organisation ... [which] unofficially and covertly used the infrastructure of the Departments of State and Army. It was closely connected to the Executive Branch (President Wilson and Col. House) and was actively supported by leading American industrialists, academicians, [etc.]. Put another way, it was a cover for 'covert political action, black propaganda, intelligence collection, and counter-espionage operations'. [...] In Russia, its members engaged in speechmaking and sight-seeing. Back in America [they] filed reports that no one read, and made more speeches" (Spence, k4000-4021).

Arriving in Petrograd at about the same time as Lenin (and possibly even on the same train) is president adviser Charles Crane, one of the senior members of the White House's Root Commission [no convenient briefing but much to reward the determined browser]...

CAMEO - THE ROOT COMMISSION: When it became apparent during the winter of 1916-1917 that American entry into the war was ever more likely, President Wilson sought advice from his Secretary of State Robert Lansing as to Russia's prospects on the Eastern Front. It was decided that a fact-finding 'commission of distinguished Americans' should be sent to Petrograd. After lengthy - and sometimes heated - consultation, Lansing's recommended candidate was veteran politician (and Nobel Peace Prize Laureate from 1912) Elihu Root. Crane led the advance party to Petrograd in April, and was joined by Root 13th June to mid-July. Root was never overly impressed with the Provisional Government's prospects in the field against Germany, but makes America's financial support conditional upon Russia fighting on. "No fight," he warned, "no loans!!" (Steele, op. cit.). The Commission's links to the world of high finance will later be scrutinised by Walter Lippmann, check him out, and see Timeline 1st January 1920, 4th August 1920, and 1st January 1922. Here is an example of how a hundred million Americans were told what to think ...

"From the Revolution of March 1917 to the final collapse of the eastern front in early February 1918 it is just to say that a strong bias is reflected in the presentation of the news. [...] This bias persistently plays down news of Russia's weakness and plays up announcements and events which sustain hope" (Lippmann, 1920b, p.105).

More examples from Lippmann in later entries.

ASIDE - THE CHEMIN DES DAMES: The so-called "Ladies' Road" runs south-eastward from the Soissons-Laon highway to the wooded plateau at Craonne, some 30 miles distant. The Aisne river runs parallel to, to the south of, and some 500 feet below the chemin for its entire length. The Germans had dug in this high ground in November 1914 to stabilise themselves in the First Battle of the Aisne [see 13th September 1914]. The French attack was thus uphill all the way. Halfway along the Chemin you will nowadays find the Caverne du Dragon Museum [website RECOMMENDED VISIT]. The battle gave the Germans a chance to field their latest infantry weapon, the MG08/15, a lightened version of their MG08 heavy machine gun on a bipod [see this weapon in action].

Unfortunately for the French, the Germans had learned that an attack was imminent, and were well prepared. As a result, French losses on the first day alone were 40,000 killed, wounded, and missing. [THREAD = THE SHAPING OF THE MODERN WORLD] [THREAD = WW1 MAJOR BATTLES AND CAMPAIGNS]

1917 [27th April] The Flip Sides of Patriotism [III - The Legal Framework (The 1917 Draft Act)]: [Continued from 14th April 1917] On 27th April 1917 Congress begins to debate how best to manage their military recruitment, there having been only "lukewarm" response to appeals for volunteers. The resulting Selective Service Act of 1917 [Wikipedia briefing] eventually becomes law 18th May, and requires all males aged 21 to 30 to register for potential call-up on or before 5th June. There will be further required registrations in 1918 [sub-thread continues at 17th April 1918 ...]. [THREAD = THE DEATH OF DEMOCRACY] [THREAD = THE BATTLE FOR HEARTS AND MINDS] [THREAD = THE COGNITIVE SCIENCE OF POLITICAL PROPAGANDA]

1917 [1st-15th May (O.S. 19th April-2nd May)] The 1917 Russian Revolution [VII - The Provisional Government ("The April Days")]: [Continued from 16th April 1917] On 1st May 1917, it comes to light that the Provisional Government's Foreign Minister Pavel Milyukov [Wikipedia biography] has been exchanging telegrams with his western counterparts confirming Russia's continued interest in acquiring Black Sea access to the Mediterranean from the struggling Ottoman Empire. This, however, is against the understanding reached with the Petrograd Soviet back in March, which had - very explicitly - been that only defensive operations were to be conducted ...

ASIDE: The Petrograd Soviet stood, of course, to the political left of the Provisional Government, just as the Duma had stood to the political left of autocratic Tsarism. Leftist parties, of course, routinely eschew war not just as tragic in itself, but because they regard it as one set of victims of oppression fighting another set of victims of oppression in the interests of both sets of oppressors!! War, in Leftist eyes, always involves one set of mugs bravely fighting another, with cowards and their lackies reaping the benefits.

CAMEO - HOW OUR PAPERS REPORTED IT: Here is Lippmann again, explaining how our modern world has been largely shaped by the Establishment press machine ...

"The question which dominated all the news out of Russia was whether the Russians would continue to fight. [...] There were] two alternative theories: one the official Allied theory that Russia would fight; the other, the theory of an unknown Russian revolutionist in New York [actually Leon Trotsky, who had been interviewed back in March - Ed.] and of 'general opinion in Berlin' that Russia would not fight" (op. cit., p105).

On 15th May, after a fortnight of horse-trading, the Petrograd Soviet votes to assimilate itself into the Provisional Government, taking six of the 16 cabinet seats and installing Alexander Kerensky [Wikipedia biography] as Minister of War [sub-thread continues at 1st July 1917 ...]. 1917 [3rd-19th May] The Rise of Herbert Hoover [XIII - The Food Administration, 1917 (Hoover Extends His Empire)]: [Continued from 3rd April 1917] On 3rd May 1917 Hoover arrives back in NYC and immediately petitions President Wilson to become his administration's "food dictator" (Burner, 1978, p97), citing his experience since 1914 administering Allied aid into Belgium [see Timeline 1st September 1914 and follow the thread <The Rise of Herbert Hoover>). On 19th May Wilson asks Congress to approve a post of Food Administrator under the Lever Act [Wikipedia briefing], and when the act is formally passed 10th August 1917 Hoover gets the job. The programme introduces specific price-fixing powers for wheat (the price eventually settles at $2.20 per bushel for the coming year, 1918, and will hold until after the Armistice - Ed.), and is well supported by a publicity campaign ...

1917 [10th May] Zionism During WW1 [VII - The Balfour Declaration (Lloyd George Speech)]:

[Continued from 2nd February 1917] British Prime Minister Lloyd George tells an off-the-record meeting of the House of Commons that the war will result in the Ottoman Empire permanently forfeiting control of the Middle East. Indeed he has already set John Buchan’s Department of Information the task of making it so. In his (1989) book "A Peace to End All Peace" [Amazon] David Fromkin suggests that at least one of the reasons for this lay in the Prime Minister’s personal Zionism, thus ...

"Taking office as 1916 turned into 1917, the new Prime Minister brought old-fashioned Radical fervour to such emerging war goals as the destruction of the reactionary Ottoman Empire […]. One of Lloyd George's first actions […] was to order his armies in Egypt onto the offensive. One of the others was to order John Buchan […] to launch a propaganda campaign portraying the destruction of the Ottoman Empire as a major purpose of the war. The campaign captured the imagination of the public: "The Turk Must Go!" proved to be an effective slogan. […] Lloyd George was the only man in his government who had always wanted to acquire Palestine for Britain. He also wanted to encourage the development of a Jewish homeland in Palestine. […] He was only the latest in a long line of Christian Zionists in Britain that stretched back to the Puritans. […] Guided by the Scriptures, the Puritans believed that the advent of the Messiah would occur once the people of Judaea were restored to their native land" (pp264-268).

1917 [22nd May] The French Army Mutinies: Now based in Paris and liaising between the French Ministry of War and the War Office in London, Edward Spears [see 1914 (14th August)] hears rumours of mutinies in the French Army on the Aisne. Upon urgent investigation it transpired that up to 30,000 troops had simply walked out of the line on the Chemin des Dames front, and across the front as a whole as many as 49 divisions were seriously destabilised (Pedroncini, 1967). The French High Command’s response was to respond positively to the complaints of the troops, and across the front as a whole as many as 49 divisions were seriously destabilised (Pedroncini, 1967). The French High Command’s response was to respond positively to the complaints of the many while dealing firmly with the few, that is to say, with the ringleaders. More than 20,000 men were court-martialled, 2878 sentenced to hard labour, 554 sentenced to death, and 43 actually executed (Pedroncini, 1967). On the plus side Marshall Pétain promised more leave and no more expensive grand gestures. France would, he said, “wait for more tanks, and the Americans”! [Continued from 10th May 1917] The Zionist lobby in Britain now promotes its case by calling in some favours from The Times, thus ...

"Weizmann had not only British Jewry on his side in the main but also the most influential portions of the British press - whose ranks now were joined by The Times itself, with a leader on 'The Future of the Jews' that appeared on May 29. Until that moment, The Times […] had never shown any particular interest in Zionism or the Jewish question. But its editor, Geoffrey Dawson [check him out], was a member of the Round Table group [check it out], which favoured Zionism, and its foreign editor, H. Wickham Steed [check him out] was […] a firm believer in the Zionist solution. Steed had remained silent in the pages of The Times over this question until now, but it was he who contributed the May 29 leader […] observing that:] 'As Dr.
Weizmann, the President of the English Zionist Federation, observes in the letter which we published yesterday, [...] the Jews do constitute a nationality. The question in one of fact, not of argument" (Sanders, 1983, pp532-533).

1917 [1st-30th June] WW1 Grand Strategies and Carve-Ups [I - Asia Minor ("The Ottoplan")] : [New sub-thread (but nicely contextualised by the <Zionism> narrative)] During June 1917 secret talks take place in Geneva, Switzerland, between carefully briefed representatives of British Prime Minister Lloyd George and the Ottoman Empire's until-now-pro-German Minister of War, Enver Pasha [Wikipedia biography]. The British envoy is Vickers Limited's "Merchant of Death" in person, Basil Zaharoff [check him out], and the purpose of the talks is to break the war alliance between the Central Powers and the Ottoman Empire [see Timeline 27th October 1914]. Fromkin (1989) tells the story this way (note that Mesopotamia is modern Iraq and Palestine modern Israel) ...

"Within months of taking office, Lloyd George was engaged in secret negotiations with [Enver]. The Prime Minister's agent in the negotiations was Vincent Caillard [Grace's Guide obituary], financial director of the giant armaments firm Vickers [acting] through his close business associate, Basil Zaharoff [...]. Through his emissary, the Prime Minister offered bribes - large bank accounts - to Enver and his associates to leave the war on Britain's terms, which were: Arabia to be independent; Armenia and Syria to enjoy local protectorates [...] and freedom of navigation through the Dardanelles to be secured. [...] France, Italy, and Russia were to get nothing " (pp266-267).

1917 [5th June] Religion and Killing [The Sergeant York Story (Boot Camp)]: A 29-year-old Tennessee agricultural labourer, Alvin C. York [Wikipedia biography], claims exemption from the draft on the grounds of conscientious objection. He is conscripted nonetheless and, while training at Camp GordonGA, discusses his pacifist ideals with his superiors and is eventually persuaded of the Christian morality of bearing arms [see the dramatisation of this conversation, 1941 ("Sergeant York"). This will prove unfortunate for the Germans who will face him on the Western Front the following year because, having hunted the backwoods all his life, he is an exceptionally fine shot [the Alvin York story continues at 8th October 1918]. 1917 [1st-23rd July (O.S. 18th June-10th July)] The 1917 Russian Revolution [VIII - The Provisional Government (The Galician Disaster)]: [Continued from 1st May 1917] On 1st July 1917, at the instigation of the "No fight, no loans!" policy of the Root Commission [see inset 16th April above], the Russians cobble together an offensive of sorts on the Ternopol [map] sector of the front in the direction of Lvov/Lviv [map]. Known nowadays as the Kerensky Offensive [Wikipedia briefing], the advance bogs down within days in an easily flanked salient of their own making. The Germans and the Austro-Hungarians counterattack the northern and southern shoulders of this salient on 18th July, and so thinly stretched are the defenders that the following day the Germans are able to break through and collapse that entire sector of Russian front.

IN EFFECT RUSSIA CEASES TO BE A THREAT TO THE CENTRAL POWERS RIGHT HERE

This is a significant moment in history, because disaffected Russian soldiers now see the Provisional Government as the puppet of foreign financiers, and turn in great numbers to the only consistently anti-war party, namely the Petrograd Soviet, where they become the founding cadres of the Red Army [Wikipedia briefing]. The Root Commission, in other words, has achieved in weeks what the Kaiser has been working on for three years!

CAMEO - HOW OUR PAPERS REPORTED IT: Here is Lippmann again, explaining how Western financiers, having created the East-West schism, tried to cover up their disastrous misjudgement with in-your-face untruths and journalistic platitudes …

"… the headlines showed a continued optimism, as the following examples show:

July 30 ARMY NOW RECOVERING [they were not - Ed.]

July 31 RUSSIAN ARMIES NOW STRIKING BACK [at skirmish level only - Ed.]

[further examples given]

Aug. 5 ROOT HAS FAITH RUSSIA WILL STAND [no he doesn’t - Ed.]

[further examples given]

Aug. 8 SEES RUSSIA SOON AS STRONG AS EVER [a blatant falsehood - Ed.]

Aug. 9 WE CAN DEPEND ON RUSSIA WITH AID FROM US, ROOT SAYS [wishful thinking, merely restating his mission - Ed.]

[further examples given]

Thus [...] on the average once every other day, a certain show of optimism is made. It is derived from official reports of minor engagements, from advices to the State Department, and from the Russian Government. [...] No doubt there were minor successes, but the net disaster was indisputable"

Lippmann went on to quantify his argument by counting up headlines in The New York Times by category. He reported 82 Russia-positive items (49 of which were official statements from one or other of the governments concerned ) versus 66 Russia-negative items. Moreover, 36 of those 66 negatives came complete with ready-prepared disclaimers by those same governments, rendering them positives in disguise. This means that a fairer statement of the ratio is 118 positive to 30 negative. Coming right up to date, these same techniques of deception appear again in Mark Dice's (2017) "The True Story of Fake News" [Amazon]. In Dice’s analysis, one of the two main skills in 21st Century political propaganda is "Agenda Setting", that is to say, "deciding firstly what is news and secondly what to think about it" (p52), and the other skill is "Lying by Omission".

Zionism During WW1 [X - American Influence (The Morgenthau Mission)]: [Continued from 1st June] Early in July 1917 secret talks take place in Gibraltar between "that faithful son of the Jewish people, whose services in these hard years Jewry will not forget", the U.S. Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire, Henry Morgenthau, Sr. [Wikipedia biography], and a Zionist delegation headed by Weizmann. 1917 [17th-30th July (O.S. 4th-30th July)] The 1917 Russian Revolution [IX - The Provisional Government ("The July Days"): [Continued from 1st July 1917] On 17th July 1917, at the height of the German rampage in the Ternopol sector of the Eastern Front, Prime Minster Lvov and many of his Cabinet fall on their swords in disgrace. Minister of War Kerensky takes Lvov's place in a new coalition of left- and right-wing factions, and General Lavr Kornilov [Wikipedia biography], previously commanding general of the 25th Army Corps, is made Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces. The public at large is not placated, however, and violent proletarian demonstrations - the "July Days" - erupt in Petrograd. The popular mood will later be summarised in George Stewart's (1933) "The White Armies of Russia" [Amazon] in the following terms ...

"The Provisional Government possessed the flower of Russian liberalism but was wholly unable to command the situation. [...] The murmuring and complaints of soldiers, sailors, workers, and peasants had now become a full-throated roar. While liberals bandied parliamentary concepts, the Reds [...] spoke directly to the primary human desires of Russia's people" (p266).

In fact the arrival of a 20,000-strong force of sailors from Petrograd's Kronstadt Naval Base [Wikipedia briefing] very nearly triggers a full-scale Bolshevik coup there and then, but the moment passes for want of sufficient cross-party political support, and in the ensuing government crackdown Lenin is forced to take refuge in neighbouring Finland [sub-thread continues at 1st August 1917 ...]. 1917 [18th July] Zionism During WW1 [XI - The Balfour Declaration (The Rothschild Amendments)]: [Continued from 1st June 1917] On behalf of the Zionist lobby in Britain, Lord Rothschild feeds back to Lloyd George some desired amendments to the Balfour Declaration draft submitted to him back in February [see 2nd February above]. The essence of the amendments is that the final draft of the declaration should be short and to the point, stating merely two guiding principles. These are (1) "that Palestine should be reconstituted as the National Home of the Jewish people", and (2) that His Majesty's Government "will use its best endeavours to secure the achievement of this object" [sub-thread continues at 3rd September 1917 ...]. 1917 [1st-31st August (O.S. 19th July-18th August)] The 1917 Russian Revolution [XI - Foreigners Pick Sides for the Big Match (Kerensky vs. Trotsky)]: [Continued from 17th July 1917] August 1917 is a time of fevered behind-the-scenes politicking. The Bolsheviks - now speaking (in Lenin's absence) with the voice of Leon Trotsky - have been thrown onto the back foot by Kornilov's public order intervention on the streets of Petrograd. The Germans are busily charming their way into the affections of the lately Tsarist buffer states they have "liberated" - not least Finland, Latvia, and the Ukraine - promising imminent independence. The Americans still have the Root Commission in theatre but are keeping their eyes open for the commercial main chance. The Zionists are backing whoever most promises to hurt the Tsarists. And as for the British, well you could hardly make it up ...

LEST IT BE OVERLOOKED: Readers who have browsed directly into this entry may have missed the fact that Trotsky had been in NYC earlier in the year, holding discussions with anti-Tsarist Jewish bankers on the one hand and British intelligence on the other. The following cameo is clipped from the entry for the British Ambassador to the United States Sir William Wiseman [click here if you prefer to see the full original] ...

"CAMEO - LEON TROTSKY IN THE BIG APPLE: War games conducted by Sir Henry Wilson [see own entry] in 1911 had indicated that the Franco-British Entente would be unlikely to win a ground war against the Central Powers unless half the German Army was simultaneously diverted to a war in the east against Russia. Wiseman is mentioned in Chapters 30 and 31 of Macgregor and Docherty's 2017 book "Prolonging the Agony" [see own entry], and repeatedly throughout Richard B. Spence's 2017 book "Wall Street and the Russian Revolution, 1905-1925". The authors of both works are making the case that Leon Trotsky's mysterious 1917 visit to New York City was part of a multifaceted conspiracy to influence the outcome of the then-daily-unfolding Russian Revolution. Penniless and exiled from Russia for sedition, Trotsky had sailed (first class) from Barcelona 28th December 1916 aboard the Spanish liner Montserrat, arriving NYC 13th January 1917, being met on the quayside by representatives of that city's Jewish activist groups (coordinated, in all probability, by the fanatical anti-Tsarist banker Jacob Schiff [see own entry], partner in investment bankers Kuhn, Loeb and Company). [...] Trotsky spent the next three months working the audiences (and wallets) of NYC's Jewish community, and presumably met secretly with who-knows-which intelligence factions, offering who-knows-how-much for who-knows-what political favours.

ASIDE - THE PROBLEM OF CUI BONO: One of the enduring historical mysteries is why Schiff and Wiseman appear to have been working to the same ends. Schiff was anti-Tsarist by conviction but pro-German by birth and family links. By rights, therefore, he should have been supporting the German-backed Vladimir Lenin rather than his pro-Allied rival Trotsky. Equally, a Lenin-Trotsky alliance had a better chance of taking Russia out of the war than a revolution at odds with itself, so why should Wiseman have been supporting that, when it meant doubling the number of Germans on the Western Front? The scholarly debate goes on to this day. [...]

The 1917 Russian Revolution [XII - America Considers the Options (House's Planning Group)]: [Continued from 1st August 1917] Finally realising the enormity of the events unfolding on the European Eastern Front, President Wilson has "Colonel" Edward House [see 3rd April above] assemble an advisory committee of wise men. Taking temporary quarters in NYC’s Public Library, the group includes academics and political correspondents such as Walter Lippmann [see insets 16th April above]. Fromkin (1989) will later point to how little these experts actually knew: the ten scholars assigned to cover developments in the Middle East, for example, had previously studied the Crusades, and spent much time wandering the library aisles seeking more up-to-date information. Many "did no more than summarize the information that they found in an encyclopaedia" (p261) [sub-thread continues at 10th September 1917 ...]. The 1917 Russian Revolution [XIII - The Kerensky Government (Britain's Failed Interference)]: [Continued from 1st September 1917] On 10th September 1917 the recently-appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Russian armed forces, General Kornilov, urged on by conservative elements among his General Staff, moves loyal units toward Petrograd. This is the beginning of what is now known as the “Kornilov Affair” [Wikipedia briefing] ...

CAMEO - BRITISH PROMISES AND INDUCEMENTS: Historians have yet to agree as to Kornilov’s true motivations. For our present purposes we are happy to go along with the Wikipedia explanation [accessed 24th January 2021], which points the finger at a British intelligence operation, thus ...

"Kornilov had the support of the British military attaché, Brigadier-General Alfred Knox [Wikipedia biography], and Kerensky accused Knox of producing pro-Kornilov propaganda. Kerensky also claimed Lord Milner [check him out] wrote him a letter expressing support for Kornilov. A British armoured car squadron commanded by Commander Oliver Locker-Lampson [Wikipedia biography] and dressed in Russian uniforms participated in the coup."

On 11th September Trotsky and the Petrograd Soviet order their supporters to dig in expecting an imminent attack, and, in collaboration with the Menshevik and Social Revolutionary factions, set up a Committee to Combat Counter-Revolution - soon to be formalised as the Cheka Secret Police [Wikipedia briefing] - to monitor sources of dissent ...

ASIDE - ON COUNTER-REVOLUTION: This committee should not be confused with the Military Revolutionary Committee (MRC) set up six weeks later [see 22nd October below]. The definition of "counter-revolutionary" is, of course, factionally centred from the outset. Somewhat ironically, Trotsky will himself be denounced - and assassinated - in due course as a counter-revolutionary.
In the event, the attack never materialises, it being later claimed that pro-revolutionary railway workers deliberately sabotaged the assembly of Kornilov's approaching troop trains. Kornilov resigns 13th September, and Kerensky is appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Provisional Government's armed forces the following day, with Headquarters at Mogilev [map].

On 2nd November the MRC holds its first full session, attended by delegations from these eighteen local units. Fifteen of them immediately swear their allegiance to the revolution. 1917 [26th October] Zionism During WW1 [XIII - The Balfour Declaration (The Curzon Memorandum)]: [Continued from 3rd September 1917] On 26th October 1917 Lord Curzon [check him out] circulates a memorandum entitled "The Future of Palestine" [Wikimedia full text online] for discussion at War Cabinet. The essence of his concerns are summarised in Ronald Sanders' (1983) "The High Walls of Jerusalem" [Amazon] as follows (we have highlighted the truly prophetic bit) ...

"Curzon began by calling attention to what he saw as a number of contradictions in the views of the proponents of a Jewish Palestine - in particular, over the matter of whether or not a state was what they ultimately sought. [...] The larger part of his paper was devoted to the question he had raised at the last War Cabinet discussion of the draft declaration - that of Palestine's capacity to absorb a large immigrant Jewish population. [...] ‘Palestine,’ he wrote, ‘would appear to be incapacitated by physical and other conditions from ever becoming in any real sense the national home of the Jewish people.’ [Further points made] ‘There arises the further question,’ he went on, ‘what is to become of the people of this country, assuming the Turk to be expelled [...] They profess the Mohammedan faith. They will not be content either to be expropriated for Jewish immigrants, or to act merely as hewers of wood and drawers of water to the latter’" (pp603-604).

ASIDE: Note the phrase "hewers of wood and drawers of water" in the above, for this is taken straight out of the Bible, where it alludes to the Israelite subjugation of the Gibeonites (Joshua, 9:21). It may therefore carry a tinge of Establishment anti-Semitism.

Unfortunately for them, however, Soviet agents have intercepted a copy of their battle plans and, despite the efforts of a squadron of armoured cars, the uprising is short lived ...

CAMEO - THE PETROGRAD ARMOUR CARS: The armoured cars were almost certainly some of the Russian-based Lanchesters [Wikipedia briefing] of Britain's Royal Naval Armoured Car Division (RNACD) [Wikipedia briefing]. This unit had been in Russia since 1916 under the command of the aforementioned Commander Oliver Locker-Lampson [see inset 10th September 1917: note carefully the allegation that the vehicles in question were crewed by British troops in Russian uniforms], and had initially been deployed on the Caucasus Front. It had then seen action as steel cavalry in the ill-fated Kerensky Offensive [see 1st July 1917], and was now - in part at least - conveniently at hand at Petrograd. We have seen no final judgement on the rather delicate question whether the vehicles had been (a) supplied with British crews, (b) left with the keys in the ignition, or (c) stolen in the heat of battle by Kerensky loyalists. FURTHER READING: For an excellent introduction to this aspect of operations in Russia see Charlotte Alston's (2018 [full text online]) paper entitled "Encounters on the Eastern Front: The Royal Naval Armoured Car Division in Russia 1915-1920".

Also on 11th November, Izvestia, the Soviet's house newsletter pointedly denies "the base insinuation" that its Congress is being disloyal to the Entente. It was not, it said, "striving after a separate peace". Rather, Russia would henceforth simply be taking "a defensive position" (Magnes, op. cit., p9). Perhaps unsurprisingly, nobody seems particularly convinced [sub-thread continues at 20th November 1917 ...]. 1917 [13th November] The Middle Eastern Campaigns [XXIV - The Palestine Offensive (The Battle of Mughar Ridge)]: [Continued from 31st October 1917] After a summer of stalemate, the recent success at Beersheba permits an E.E.F. advance into the Judean Hills to threaten the Ottoman garrison at Jerusalem [sub-thread continues at 17th November 1917 ...]. 1917 [15th November-5th December (O.S. 2nd-22nd November)] WW1 in the Caucasus [XII - Revolution in the North (The Transcaucasian Sejm)]: [Continued from 9th March 1917] On 15th November 1917, in the aftermath of the October Revolution [see 7th November above], the Petrograd Soviet establishes a Transcaucasian Sejm [Wikipedia briefing] at Erzincan to serve as a puppet civil administration in occupied Armenia. The ensuing weeks see weary Russian soldiers plodding north, to be replaced by Armenian militia heading south to take their places on the firing steps. Henceforth, the fight will be between an empire and a mere dissident province. On 5th December the Ottoman-Russian Armistice is signed [sub-thread continues at 5th February 1918 ...]. 1917 [17th November-8th December] The Middle Eastern Campaigns [XXV - The Palestine Offensive (To The Walls of Jerusalem)]: [Continued from 13th November 1917] Following Allenby's recent advance onto the Mughar Hills, the Ottomans fall back toward Jerusalem, abandoning a considerable number of guns. This will have come as good news to Lloyd George, who had instructed Allenby back in June to deliver "Jerusalem before Christmas" (Sanders, 1983) [sub-thread continues at 9th December 1917 ...]. 1917 [20th-21st November (O.S. 7th-8th November)] The Russian Civil War [II - Picking Over The Imperial Carcass (Ukrainians Declare Independence)]: [Continued from 11th November 1917] On 20th November 1917 Trotsky sends a note across to the Entente and American Embassies in Petrograd again asking them to cooperate in peace negotiations; other Commissars send out briefings according to their portfolio to regional government and military command centres. For its part, the Ukrainian Rada immediately re-proclaims itself as the Ukrainien People's Republic (albeit it is presently occupied by the Central Powers following defeat in battle) and promises Petrograd-style reforms of its own, subject to ratification at a Constituent Assembly to be convened early in 1918 [see 22nd January 1918] [sub-thread continues at 22nd November 1917 ...]. 1917 [23rd-27th November (O.S. 10th-14th November)] The Russian Civil War [IV - Picking Over The Imperial Carcass (The Trotsky Revelations)]: [Continued from 22nd November 1917] On 23rd November Trotsky makes diplomatic waves by revealing snippets from the documents his troops had retrieved when they ransacked the Foreign Ministry earlier in the month. Among the secret agreements on show is the Sykes-Picot Agreement (see 27th February 1916), under the terms of which the Entente had agreed amongst itself that Palestine would be administered internationally after the war, rather than be made over to any new Ottoman or Arabian Kingdom. London, meanwhile, has only just caught up with Trotsky's armistice proposals (moaning that the Germans had been told 19 hours before they had), eventually instructing Sir George Buchanan (Wikipedia biography), the British Ambassador, to point out that Britain could not be expected to negotiate with a regime it had yet to recognise (the United States and France make much the same point on 27th November) [sub-thread continues at 28th November 1917 ...]. 1917 [28th-29th November (O.S. 15th-16th November)] The Russian Civil War [V - Picking Over The Imperial Carcass (Christmas Comes Early For Germany)]: [Continued from 23rd November 1917] On 28th November 1917 the MRC's Commissar Krylenko signs the order for Russia's armed forces to cease fire immediately and begin "fraternising" instead ...

ASIDE: The order applies to the Russian armed forces as a whole, not just to those who have swung over to the Red Guards. In the event, many units will remain loyal to Kerensky and the Mogilev High Command, and with covert Western encouragement are already reorganising to fight as the White Army against the Reds.

The following day the German Chancellor Georg von Hertling (Wikipedia biography) addresses the Reichstag, and declares that the Petrograd Congress's proposals constitute "a discusssable basis for the opening of negotiations", especially insofar as they have promised independence for buffer states such as Poland, Lithuania, and Latvian Courland, whose people, in Germany's publicly stated view¹, "have the right to determine their own fate" (Magnes, op. cit.). The peace dividend for Germany, of course, is that peace in the east would permit a million highly experienced troops to be transferred across to the Western Front [sub-thread continues at 30th November 1917 ...]. ¹ Had Germany won the war, these lands would have ended up as German satellites rather than American. Indeed at time of writing (= January 2021), less than a handful are effortlessly free and democratic. We shall be returning to the issue of the buffer states in no little detail in 1918.
THE NEVER-ENDED RUSSIAN CIVIL WAR, 1917-ONGOING

1917 [5th-15th December (O.S. 23rd November-2nd December)] The Russian Civil War [VII - Picking Over The Imperial Carcass (The Russians Exit WW1)]:

The following day, Pravda, another Soviet publication, hints that if the Allies continue to absent themselves from the peace talks then it would simply be making it more likely that the Soviet would be forced to repudiate the large debts accumulated in the name of the Provisional Government and the Tsar before it. This veiled threat is - on the surface at least - studiously ignored by the Allies, and thus on 15th December 1917 the Revolutionary delegation formally signs its separate armistice. That same day, the Czech nationalist Tomáš Masaryk [see 14th November 1915] responds by offering his 50,000-strong "Czech Legion" - which has been fighting until now alongside the Imperial Army on the Eastern Front - for use on the Western Front, where it would operate under French command. We shall be returning in due course to the practical problem of how they were actually going to get across Germany to fight the Central Powers.

1917 [9th-11th December] The Middle Eastern Campaigns [XXVI - The Palestine Offensive (Jerusalem Captured)]: (Continued from 17th November 1917) On 9th December 1917, after three weeks battling through the wadis and defiles of the Judaean Hills, Allenby's E.E.F. now pushes forward to cut the Jaffa-Jerusalem highway west of Jerusalem. Within hours the Ottoman garrison is abandoning its defences and falling back northward, leaving the Mayor of Jerusalem to wander amongst the British drawn up on the Mount of Olives looking for an officer senior enough to receive the keys to his city. On 11th December Allenby formally enters Jerusalem (but deliberately with "no great pageantry of arms").

1917 [14th December (O.S. 1st December)] The Russian Civil War [XI - Picking Over The Imperial Carcass (Lloyd George Holds Forth)]: (Continued from 12th December 1917) On 14th December 1917, in a speech in London, Lloyd George lays in to the errant Russians as follows ...

"Russia threatens to retire out of the war and leave the French Democracy [...] to shift for themselves. I do not wish to minimise in the least the gravity of this decision. [...] By her retirement she strengthens the Hohenzollerns and weakens the forces of democracy. Her action will not lead, as she imagines, to universal peace" (Magnes, op. cit., p26).

Key: [Start at "eight o'clock" and work clockwise] (1) The Central Powers are to the west of the line Odessa-Riga, which approximates to the old Eastern Front 1914-1917. (2) The North Russian Front is a bridgehead around the summer-only ports of Murmansk and Archangel where the British are organising the local White Army resistance. Note (a) the long Arctic frontier with Finnish Lapland, and (b) how closely the Finns threaten the Murmansk-Petrograd railway. (3) The (in practice actually rather fluid) "Siberian Cossack Front" runs the line Perm [map] to Orenburg [map]. (4) A "Ural Cossack Front" circles a White enclave around the North Caspian port of Atyrau [map]. (5) The city of Tsaritsin will be become better known during WW2 as Stalingrad. (6) There is another British-led White stronghold [see <"Dunsterforce"> 27th January 1918 EXPLAINS A LOT] between the Black and Caspian Seas, straddling the borders of modern Armenia, Georgia, and Azerbaijan, and defending the oil port of Baku [map]. (7) The "Don Republic" is another White area centred on Donets. [map]. (8) A Ukrainian Front runs from the Crimea to Odessa, the Whites here being supported by France and the United States. Vladivostok is 3300 miles to the east of Perm as the crow flies, and the USA a 5000-mile sea journey beyond that.

FURTHER READING: For more on the RRSC see Robert L. Willett's (2003) "Russian Sideshow: America's Undeclared War 1918-1920" [Amazon], who devotes the whole of Chapter 15 to the subject. The railway engineers are accompanied by military observers, leading Willett to conclude that they are "actually the first echelon of the American intervention" (k3287). 1917 [17th-18th December (O.S. 4th-5th December)] The Russian Civil War [XIII - Picking Over The Imperial Carcass (Ukraine Changes Its Mind)]: [Continued from 15th December 1917] On 17th December 1917 the Revolutionary Congress accuses the Ukrainian Rada of giving succour to "counter-revolutionary forces" and issues a 24-hour desist-or-else ultimatum. The Ukrainians take no notice, and so on 18th December the first front of the Russian Civil War is opened, with rightist Ukrainian and White Imperial units on the one side, and leftist Ukrainian and Red Army units on the other ...

ASIDE: It is difficult to explain how the pro-Revolutionary sentiments expressed by the Rada as recently as 20th November (q.v.) should have changed so diametrically. It may well have resulted from German intriguing designed to destabilise the region in anticipation of their forthcoming grab-it-while-you-can Operation Faustschlag [see 18th February 1918].

WW1 Grand Strategies and Carve-Ups [III - The Brest-Litovsk Talks (Allied Interference)]: [Continued from 18th July 1917, and continuing at [18th February 1918]]

On 22nd December 1917 peace talks between the Central Powers (including Bulgaria) and the Ottoman Empire on the one hand, and the Revolutionary Congress on the other, begin at Brest-Litovsk. The German Foreign Minister Richard von Kühlmann [Wikipedia biography] presides, and the Bolshevik politician Adolph Joffe [Wikipedia biography] heads the Russian delegation. Also on 22nd December there is arrested in Petrograd a certain Colonel Andrei Kalpaschnikov [no convenient biography but see Kalpaschnikoff (1920/2020)], a counter-revolutionary with good contacts (a) with the American Ambassador in that city (David R. Francis [Wikipedia biography]), (b) with the American Red Cross Mission there (one Raymond Robins [check him out]) and in Romania (Henry W. Anderson [check him out]) [also in Washington, as it happens – Ed.], and (c) with the reactionaries out in the provinces - not least the Ukraine - who had set up the aborted Kornilov Coup three months previously [see 10th September]. Kalpaschnikov is one of the first to have his collar felt by Felix Dzerzhinsky's new Cheka secret police [see 15th December], and his crime seems to have something to do with how best to utilise the American Red Cross's motor pool ...

CAMEO - THE ROSTOV AFFAIR: It is well documented that the American Red Cross's man in Petrograd, Robins, had a few days previously received a strange telegraphic request from Anderson, his opposite number in Jassy/Iasi in Romania [map link below], asking him to release 60 Red Cross motor vehicles and 100,000 Rubles of Red Cross funds for transfer to Rostov-on-Don [map], the headquarters city of Alexey Kaledin's [Wikipedia biography] "Volunteer Army" [Wikipedia briefing], the field force of the counter-revolutionary Don Cossacks [Wikipedia briefing]...

QUICKIE - THE ROMANIAN AND UKRAINIAN FRONTS, LATE 1917: Russia and Prussia had been squabbling over influence in ethnic Romania for 40 years [see 21st May 1877, then as directed]. The Romanians have recently been at war with the Bulgarians [see 29th June 1913], and the Bulgarians sided with the Central Powers 14th October 1915. Romania was therefore finally persuaded to side with the Entente [see 27th August 1916, then as directed], only to lose more than half their lands, including their capital, Bucharest, in the Falkenhayn Offensive [see 18th September 1916, then as directed]. The Romanians thus became a left-of-line embarrassment to the Russians, who were forced to divert emergency Russian reinforcements to their aid, successfully stabilising a defensive line on the River Siret. A temporary Romanian capital was established at Jassy/Iasi [map NOTE THAT THIS CITY THEREBY SUDDENLY BECAME A GATEWAY TO THE UKRAINE AND SOUTH RUSSIA]. However, when the Russian Army collapsed during the October Revolution [see 7th November], Romania realised that she lacked the resources to continue the war on her own, and on 9th December 1917 signed the Focsani Armistice [Wikipedia briefing] with the Central Powers. This, however, provided little substantive protection for the Romanian royal family, because the Central Powers might advance again at any moment. And this was of particular concern to Britain, because the Romanian queen, Marie [Wikipedia biography], was a grand-daughter of Britain's Queen Victoria.

 PLUS ÇÀ CHANGE ... *****

As for the Ukraine, this was a fiercely nationalistic region which had never been entirely happy as part of the Tsarist Empire, and looked even less favourably upon the prospect of rule by the Bolsheviks. Unsurprisingly, therefore, the ultra-nationalist Kaledin had been appointed Ataman of the Don Cossacks 17th June 1917, and as recently as 11th December the entire Don Bend region [map] had descended into outright civil war. BREAKING: Here is a recent BBC report from that very front, still active 104 years later.

Unaware of the true purpose of Anderson's request, Robins declined it, only for it to be re-issued in the name of Ambassador Francis only hours later. The story soon circulates in diplomatic circles that the Red Cross vehicles were to have been used to smuggle Queen Marie to safety by taking her overland to Baghdad via Rostov, cis-Caucasian Russia, and Armenia [approximate route, had the operation gone ahead]. OUR VERDICT:
We see not the slightest explanatory value in the Queen Marie story, finding it both unnecessary (she could have been cruisered out of Odessa with much less effort) and extremely dangerous (the Ukraine was, as noted above, a hot and unforgiving civil war zone). We therefore presume that the motor vehicles were simply being transferred on a pretext out of pro-revolutionary areas for use by the Volunteer Army on the Don. This alternative explanation is a better fit with events the following month, not least the "Lockhart Plot" [see 29th January 1918] and the move up northward into Armenia by the "Dunsterforce" out of Baghdad [see 27th January 1918]. Much more on this often ignored theatre of war in the New Year.

On 27th December Trotsky again invites the Entente Powers to the proceedings, only for France to reply (a) that "an Ally has failed us", and (b) that she will accordingly be dealing "favourably" with the counter-revolutionaries. The session adjourns 28th December 1917, having set 9th January 1918 as the date to reconvene. On 28th December in Petrograd Trotsky grants an interview to journalist/British intelligence operative Arthur Ransome [check him out A MOST INTERESTING TALE], who conveniently gets on extraordinarily well with Trotsky's secretary Evgenia Shelepina [Spartacus Educational biography DITTO] (although it has to be admitted that the pillow talk may have been going both ways [the pair will marry in 1924 and settle in Britain - Ed.]) [sub-thread continues at 9th February 1918 ...].
